

back to one, which would comply with and be the same as the federal standard. Some questions were raised with respect to, does that mean that a person is not eligible to receive their funds if they do not cash that warrant within the one year? It does not. They still can go to the State Claims Board and that is still an outstanding obligation on the part of the state. What the amendment does, after we got to looking at it, is if we put in the operative date, there is some question as to what happens to a warrant that is issued for two years and then we change the date back to one year. So, in essence, we are going to have for one year there would be...those warrants would be in jeopardy because if they had them for two years but one year had lapsed and they had not yet cashed their warrant and then this kicks in, that would put the warrant in jeopardy right at the beginning. So what the amendment says, as it is listed as AM2957 on your desk, would simply pick up those warrants as we move into this transition, so if they are issued for two, they are good for two, and after this date of October 1 of 1992, then the one-year warrants would be issued after that date, so that anything that is outstanding will pick up that second year of a two-year warrant, and it is simply a technical amendment to make sure that any of those warrants are not in jeopardy during this transition.
